Head Of Z.O.A. Sees Danger To Israel In Arab Refugee Plan

The president of the Zionist Organization of America assailed recent proposals on the refugee problem in the Middle East as a threat to Israel's security. The official, Dr. Max Nussbaum, held that the major premise of the proposals by Dr. Joseph A. Johnson, special envoy of the Palestine Conciliation Commission, gave the refugees "the choice of repatriation to Israel, remaining where they are; or emigration elsewhere."

At the final session of his organization's national executive council, the ruling body, at the Biltmore Hotel, in New York, says the New York Times, Dr. Nussbaum said the Johnson recommendation "for a poll among refugees to determine their preferences constitutes a stark menace to Israel's security."

Dr. Nussbaum also contended that it was "quite naive to believe that the Arab refugee would cast his vote by secret ballot according to his conscience or that any one of them would dare to vote against the instructions of Nasser's commissars."

Emil Alghouri, a spokesman for Arab refugees, asserted at the United Nations that any effort to negotiate a peaceful settlement of the Palestine refugee problem would fail. He said that his people would continue the struggle to regain their homeland. Israel was proclaimed a state in May, 1948, in that part of Palestine alloted to it by the United Nations.

Both Israel and the Arabs have rejected the proposals of Dr. Johnson, who is president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, according to reports from the United Nations. Although the Johnson proposals have not been made public, they are known to involve giving the refugees a chance to choose between returning to their old home or going to new sites in Israel or to Arab lands or elsewhere.

In his address, Dr. Nussbaum noted that at a White House conference of Jewish leaders last September, he emphasized the need for the promotion of a peaceful relationship between Israel and the Arabs as a prerequisite for consideration of plans to solve the refugee problem.

Dr. Nussbaum added that at this meeting assurances were given that the United States "would not back the Johnson plan." He contended that the State Department's position was "in discrepancy with the one of the White House and is proceeding along separate lines which are not even parallel."

He cited threats by the Arab states against Israel and appealed for a joint declaration by the United States and the Soviet Union guaranteeing the boundaries of all Middle east states, reports the New York Times. He appealed to President Kennedy to put Israel and the Middle East tensions on the agenda of his discussion with Premier Khrushchev, saying, "It must be borne in mind that there are more missiles directed against Israel by Egypt than there have ever been in Cuba."

Predicts Germany Without Jews Within Thirty Years

Within the next 20 or 30 years Hitler's plans for a "Judenrein" Germany — a nation completely without Jews — will have materialized, American Orthodox Jewish leaders were told. This prediction was made by Rabbi Hans I. Grunewald, religious leader of the Jewish community of Hamburg, West Germany, says the New York Times, and a member of the executive of the Union of European Orthodox Jewish Congregations.

Speaking at the dinner session of the biennial conference of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America at the Sheraton-Park Hotel, in Washington, he said that the older generation among West Germany's 25,000 Jews "is rapidly dying out and today constitutes about 90 per cent of the Jewish population."

Before the Hitler period, Germany's Jewish population numbered 600,000. Virtually all were killed in the Hitler era.

Rabbi Grunewald said that with "only a handful of Jewish births each year in all of Germany" the deterioration of Jewish communal organization was already evident.

A major factor in what he described as the "complete disintegration" of the German-Jewish community is the "adamant refusal of a large majority of German Jews to accept Judaism as a way of life," he said.

Rabbi Grunewald rejected the hope that the development of the European Common Market might attract Jews to Germany. He said: "Germans have had a higher standard of living than other Europeans for more than a decade now, and this has already had its effect on the size of the German-Jewish community."

He reported that religious Jewish education was insufficient in quality and quantity to prevent assimilation. He noted that in Germany there was not a single Hebrew day school to provide intensive Jewish education to "even a small number of Jewish youngsters."

Later, in an interview with the New York Times, Rabbi Grunewald pointed out that Israeli officials on commercial visits to Germany, as well as Israeli youth missions, avoided any social contact with West German Jews. He said that the Israelis resented the fact that Jews had chosen to live in Germany.

Rabbi Joseph H. Lookstein, acting president of Bar-Ilan University in Israel, an American Jewish Orthodox-sponsored university, told the delegates that the Jewish day school "is the fortress of traditional Judaism."

Rabbi Lookstein, who is the religious leader of Congregation Kehilath Jeshurun in New York, said that Judaism was "not a faith like other faiths." He described it as a "way of life outlined by the divine law interpreted by ancient sages, promoted by inspired prophets, and adjusted by rabbinic authorities through the ages."

Michael Kaufman, of Far Rockaway, Queens, national director of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations, appealed for the establishment of a Torah Corps of young Jewish men and women to promote the observance of the Torah (traditional Jewish teachings) among American Jews.

He called for volunteers to visit Jewish communities throughout the U. S. that he said, "are thirsting for a genuinely religious way of life."

Rabbi Ralph Pelcovitz, former president of the Rabbinical Alliance of America and leader of Congregation Kneseth Israel, Far Rockaway, Queens, said that the synagogue needed "an elevation of standards, a higher level in all areas" to attract and hold the college-trained laymen. These, he said, are rapidly becoming "the norm" in the synagogue membership, says the New York Times. "Mediocrity has too long been the mark of the synagogue on all levels," he asserted.

25,000 Mourners, Standing Outside Synagogue, Weep For Famous Rabbi

Rabbi Aaron Kotler, one of the world's foremost Jewish scholars and an authority on the Torah, who was considered the religious leader of Orthodox Jewry, died in New York at the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center. He was 71 years old. Rabbi Kotler was dean of Beth Medrash Govoha, a post-graduate school for higher rabbinical study, in Lakewood, N. J., says the New York Times. He was a frequent visitor to Israel, where he helped found the independent Orthodox educational system.

He was born in Poland of a family of rabbis. He studied in the Slobodka Yeshiva (seminary) where he became renowned in Jewry as one of the most brilliant scholars in eastern Europe.

He became head of the Yeshiva of Slutzk in Poland. In 1929 he and his students fled from Kletzk to Vilna, and when the German army overran Vilna in 1941 Rabbi Kotler and the yeshiva escaped to the United States by way of Japan.

Rabbi Kotler founded his school in Lakewood in 1943 with 15 students. The school now has 250 students.

He was chairman of the Council of Torah Sages of the Agudath Israel, an Orthodox movement, and also chairman of the Rabbinical Council of Torah Umesorah, national society of Jewish day-schools. He was also a leader of the Union of Orthodox Rabbis of the United States and Canada.

Rabbi Kotler is survived by his widow, the former Miss Chana Perl Meltzer; a son, Rabbi Shneier Kotler; a daughter, Sarah, and 14 grandchildren. The funeral was held at Kalvirier Synagogue, Pike Street and East Broadway. The body was flown to Israel for burial.

In the shadow of Manhattan Bridge on the Lower East Side of New York laments and sobs filtered through a public address system to a crowd of 25,000 standing outside a weatherbeaten synagogue, says the New York Herald Tribune. A broken, emotion-choked voice declaimed in Yiddish: "We have lost the crown of our head . . . we are orphans . . . we have lost our father." Bearded patriarchs in long black coats, young boys with curly earlocks flowing beneath their skull caps, and others set to weeping and graying. The object of their grief was Rabbi Aaron Kotler.

With a special detachment of 200, police closed off three blocks of Pike Street to traffic during the three-hour service. Once the synagogue was filled to overflowing with 700 mourners, the police exerted their best efforts to hold back a surging human mass pressing against wooden barriers. They were not always successful as the grief-stricken pushed to get close to the building.

There was wailing and jostling as 25 of the rabbi's disciples bore his casket to the Synagogue from a hearse after a trip from Lakewood, N. J., where services had been held earlier in the day. These students, their faces unshaven and their clothing rent to signify mourning, had undergone a purification ritual by immersion in a Lakewood pool as a mark of extra deference.

Orthodox rabbis from cities in the U. S. and abroad came to pay their final respects before Rabbi Kotler's body was put aboard the plane for burial in Israel, says the New York Herald Tribune. Because of his stature in Jewish scholarship, the traditional requirement that burial take place as soon as possible after death was set aside.

Having gained renown in Poland as one of Eastern Europe's most brilliant scholars, Rabbi Kotler escaped annihilation at the hands of the Germans by fleeing with a group of students through Russia to Japan, arriving in the United States in 1941 under a special order of President Roosevelt.

In the gloom of the synagogue, his coffin resting in front of the Holy Ark, grief became a palpable thing as speakers bemoaned his loss. Some men rocked to and fro in prayer, others screamed in sorrow.

An estimated 20,000 persons, clogging the heart of Jerusalem, attended the funeral of Rabbi Aaron Kotler, chairman of the Council of Sages of Agudath Israel. For nearly two hours people from every part of the country stood on Jaffa Road, a principal business avenue and main entry port into the city, as the late rabbi was eulogized from the steps of the Yeshiva (rabbinical school).

Balconies overlooking the Yeshiva were jammed. The crush of people within the Yeshiva courtyard was so great that Jerusalem's Mayor and other notables were unable to enter, says the New York Herald Tribune. Traffic was diverted over a nearly two-mile stretch of the avenue. Over 100 policemen were mobilized for the funeral.

The mourners consisted mainly of the devoutly Orthodox. There were bearded, aged rabbis, young Talmudic students, poorly dressed workmen, and, separated from the men by unspoken, mutual consent, Orthodox women with their hair totally covered by kerchiefs. Chief Rabbi Nissim and two Cabinet ministers also participated.

After the eulogies, rabbinical students carried the coffin to the cemetery at the city's edge, Orthodox schoolboys chanting psalms headed the procession.

The crowd swirled around the coffin and hundreds sought desperately to touch the prayer shawl covering it. Over 15 minutes were required for the funeral procession to pass a given point.

Civil Rights Aide Scores Silence On Racial Prejudice

The staff director of the Federal Commission on Civil Rights assailed what he held was the failure of "many individuals — Catholic, Protestant, and Jew," and of many churches and synagogues, to speak out on racial prejudice.

Berl L. Bernhard, the director, asserted that "the treatment of our Negro citizens" was the nation's primary moral issue.

Mr. Bernhard addressed a leadership conference of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations at the Sheraton-Park Hotel, in Washington, says the New York Times. He said he did not question the "vigorous involvement" of the Roman Catholic, Protestant and Jewish national religious organizations in "championing the cause of equality and justice for all men."

But he said a distinction had to be drawn "between Christianity and Christian, between Judaism and Jew."

Mr. Bernhard declared that many Catholics, Protestants and Jews and their houses of worship "have been derelict and negligent in their failure to measure up to the standards set by the national bodies."

He made his remarks during a panel discussion of race relations. The Union of American Hebrew Congregations represents 640 Reform temples in the Western Hemisphere with more than one million members.

"Yesterday," Mr. Bernhard said, "the Jews had every right to condemn those who stood idly by while the Nazis [illegible] tortured, and finally killed millions of Jews. Therefore there can be no excuse for Jewish indifference toward the Negro."

Mr. Bernhard said he was fully aware of pressures confronting Jews in the South, but if failure to speak out "stems from fear for personal safety or material well-being, it is ignoble," he said.

He called it imperative that the American Jew, "as an individual, and through the synagogue and its programs of social action, think and act for others in the field of civil rights."

At another session, Rabbi Richard G. Hirsch, director of the Union's new Religious Action Center in Washington, urged more action on social issues by members of churches and synagogues, says the New York Times. He said that "the best way for us to be effective in Washington is to stimulate effective action in communities outside Washington."

Ben-Gurion Warns Conflict In Yemen Might Spread

Premier David Ben Gurion served notice at Tel Aviv that Israel could not remain passive if intervention by the United Arab Republic in Yemen was repeated in an Arab country closer to Israel.

While Mr. Ben-Gurion did not mention the Arab country by name, officials said he was alluding to Jordan, which is backing the old monarchist regime in Yemen, says the New York Times. Cairo is actively supporting the revolutionary republican forces there.

The Premier expressed his views for an hour and a half on Yemen, and other international and domestic subjects at a luncheon given by the Israeli editors' committee.

In an apparent allusion to President Kennedy's recent mediation offer, Mr. Ben-Gurion described as "naive" statesmen who thought the conflict in Yemen could be localized. "What is going on in Yemen is not in itself our affair, but it is difficult to believe that it will end in Yemen," he said.

He foresaw that Egyptian domination, starting out from a base in Yemen, might spread to "a country very close to us" where it would constitute grave danger to Israel's security.

So long as Egyptian intervention is restricted to Yemen, Israel's defense forces will not "intervene," Premier Ben-Gurion said. "It is impossible to say this if it reaches the country which affects us very much."

The Premier's preoccupation with the question of Israel's security was also reflected in his comments on the country's relations with West Germany.

After noting that Israel was unable to produce all the armaments needed by the state, he observed that there were "few countries prepared to sell us arms."

"There is perhaps only one country in the world from whom we might have the prospect — I do not want to say more — of obtaining arms," he said in what was understood to be an allusion to West Germany.

Mr. Ben-Gurion deplored the continued emphasis in Israel on Germany's past under the Nazi persecutors of the Jews. He asked whether the Israelis had forgotten Scripture, which says the sons should not suffer for the sins of their fathers.

The Premier reiterated his position in favor of the establishment of diplomatic relations with West Germany. He stressed, however, that the initiative would have to come from Bonn, says the New York Times. The West German Government's hesitation on the

BIRKS JEWELLERS

Forest In Israel Is Tribute To Countess Mountbatten

A forest of pine and cypress overlooking the Jezreel Valley was dedicated in memory of Countess Mountbatten, of Burma, as a tribute from the Jewish community and the Jewish National Fund in Great Britain, and from the people of Israel, to her humanitarian work.

Her husband, Earl Mountbatten, Chief of the British Imperial General Staff, was present at the ceremony, having flown to Haifa specially for the day. He was accompanied by his daughter, Lady Pamela Hicks, who helped to unveil the memorial plaque. The 50,000-tree forest is in the neighbourhood of the forests bearing the names of Queen Elizabeth II, King George V, Lord Balfour, and George Washington.

Earl Mountbatten, in a simple account of his wife's life work, confessed that "none of the family had appreciated what she meant to the rest of the world until after her death". Spontaneous movements to commemorate her name sprang up throughout the world, and he felt "proud and moved" by the planting of a forest which he thought was "especially fitting to somebody like my wife".

The JNF chairman, Jacob Tsur, welcoming the guests, said, "Israel has no orders and other things of honour to bestow", but thanked her friends by the planting of forests. The Edwina Mountbatten Forest, he said, commemorated "a great lady, loved and revered by thousands, who was always ready to come to the help of her fellow-men".

In her tribute on behalf of the group of British Jews who had initiated the forest project, Lady Wolfson said the late Countess had "the gift of inspiring leadership and a driving sense of social conscience. She walked with the humble in their pain and need."

Deputy Defence Minister Shimon Peres spoke on behalf of the Israel Government. The out-going British Ambassador, Patrick F. Hancock, had a parting compliment for the J.N.F. with which, he said, he had spent a happy time. "Wherever you go with the Keren Kayemeth you find a road, a jeep, and a friend," he said.

What Can One Man Do? Wonders!

BY STANLEY S. JACOBS

With hardly a pause to catch its breath, the once pastoral city of San Jose, California, fifty miles south of San Francisco, has been jet-propelled into the age of urban sprawl, traffic congestion, and minority problems. Old timers are a bit stunned.

Between 1950 and 1960, San Jose's population soared from 95,280 to 202,471 people. A large portion of the new arrivals are of Mexican descent or Negroes who were drawn by new industry into the old town.

Urban planners estimate that by the year 2000 San Jose will be larger than its famous neighbor, San Francisco, and veteran human relations experts quailed when they contemplated San Jose's growing pains. Their fears seemed well-founded:

The Mexican-American population, rigidly segregated, could prove too peppery a morsel for the expanding city to digest.

Negroes moving to San Jose might encounter resentment, lack of decent housing and job opportunities.

The relief burden, because of increasing case-loads of non-white minorities, "Okies," and "Arkies," might prove unbearable.

Some of these apprehensions have not yet been entirely dissipated, but conditions never became as bad as the worriers feared. In no small part this is a tribute to a stocky, energetic citizen named Ben Avrech who generates fierce devotion and enthusiasm wherever he moves. His interests range from the Kiwanis Club (he's a past president) to the Santa Clara Valley Council for Civic Unity (they gave him a handsome bronze plaque for his efforts as a civic gadfly) to the ADL of which he is local chairman.

Born 57 years ago in central Europe, Ben Avrech saw his family decimated by pogromists. At 15, a penniless refugee, he came to New York via Canada, went to school in the evenings and within a year opened his own business with the small capital he had earned. At 17, he was employing 65 people, manufacturing children's dresses. He moved to California in 1937 and took over a store in San Jose owned by an uncle.

A decade ago, Avrech, then in his mid-40's, was the somewhat inarticulate and reserved proprietor of a modest-sized department store. He had only a nodding acquaintance with the mayor, city council members, the newspaper editor, or the school superintendent and prominent clergymen. Interested since his tragic boyhood in Europe in the problems of minorities, Avrech was a quiet observer who saw many injustices in his town but didn't quite know how to effect changes.

Somewhat hesitantly, he became a member of the San Jose Bnai Brith Lodge's anti-defamation committee in 1952. Now his training in community leadership began and he brought to bear his businessman's knack for getting things done. Inevitably, he became ADL chairman and, in his own words, "that marked a turning-point in my life. The League gave me the training and tools needed to do a job for human relations in San Jose. It was tough schooling but it paid off for my city!"

As ADL chairman, Ben Avrech took a hard look at San Jose's restive minorities and the discrimination which seemed a permanent evil at the time.

Negroes protested that they were shunted from agency to agency, seeking work which always eluded them. The Mexican-Americans, who made up 25 per cent of the city's population, had no organization of their own and lived in decaying slum areas with poorly lit, neglected streets. Their children complained of police harshness when arrested for real or fancied wrongs.

Ben button-holed politicians, club leaders, newspaper reporters, Chamber of Commerce officials, and businessmen. "If we are going to be a major city soon, let's start thinking and acting like one," he said. He plumped for an official city commission on human relations. More to humor him than anything else, the civic officials listened. But there is no force like a shy man turned zealot in a just cause.

Tapping ADL resources, Ben Avrech armed himself with statistics, model laws, booklets, reports, letters, and charts. Impressed by New York State's highly effective commission against discrimination (SCAD), he obtained new allies daily as he wandered through his city selling the idea of an official human relations body for San Jose. The city council finally invited him to speak on the need for such a commission; Ben still chuckles at the memory.

"Me a public speaker? I was scared stiff. But I believed in this thing and must have done a fair selling job." He won out. Mayor Doer appointed a committee of 25 to study problems of discrimination.

Now he began ringing doorbells asking San Jose citizens what they thought about segregation, job discrimination, equal educational opportunity, and other problems which many never realized were parked on their door-steps. He got some sneers and hard words, a few "Communist" epithets, but he persisted.

He persuaded 40 San Jose State College students to conduct a mass interview of local residents to learn the full extent of discrimination in the city.

At the new Ford plant, in line with the company's fair employment practices policy, he got an endorsement by Ford officials of his plan for a human relations commission.

Then he went to the Boy Scouts and the YMCA, to the county hospital, churches, synagogues, PTA groups, service clubs and citizens' meetings. He now spoke with increasing confidence.

Follow The Sun To The South!

SEE PAGES 1, 5, 6, 7

Finally, the influential San Jose Mercury-News, impressed by the dedicated merchant, gave his plan editorial support. In 1960 San Jose established a human relations commission. The commission has broad powers, including that of the subpoena, and meets diligently each month to hear complaints. Almost by common agreement, Ben Avrech became its first chairman.

Job discrimination charges are heard and conciliated. There is much to be done. As a measure of the task ahead, at the moment, Ben is seeking a $60,000 federal grant to make a study-in-depth of Mexican-American problems in San Jose including housing discrimination, school drop-outs, job barriers, and voting rights.

Ben has a knack for attracting allies. He says that San Jose's new status as a minority-conscious city is due chiefly to a group of dedicated men and women who have waged the good fight for equal rights—people from the churches, the civic unity committee, the Community Service Organization (Americans of Mexican descent), NAACP, Bnai Brith and others.

But all agree that Ben Avrech is the social catalyst who moves them to action.

These days Ben's pioneering work in human relations — as one of California's most energetic and imaginative Bnai Brith anti-defamation chairmen — is paying dividends in progress.

San Jose's new concern for its minority population is shown in many ways: better lighting and streets in the predominantly Mexican areas; an upsurge of interest in fair housing (Ben is working for a local law against housing bias); greater use of materials from ADL and other agencies in schools, churches, and civic groups; warm interest in human relations by business and trade groups which in the past turned a deaf ear to his pleas.

Ben is gratified by all this and more. Recently he received a letter from the San Jose police chief, Ray Blackmore, saying in essence: "Dear Ben, I want your help in getting a human relations training program started for my men now . . . " The letter delighted Ben: "Look at America! In Europe, I saw the police and the Cossacks beat and kill innocent human being. Here officers want to learn the right techniques of dealing with people of all races and religions. There's plenty of hope for all of us . . . "

MARRIAGES

BACK-DANCYGER

The marriage of Miss Jacqueline Barbara Dancyger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer Dancyger, 16 Rosseau Road, to Melvin Back, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Back, 341 Ossington Avenue, was solemnized on September 4, at six o'clock, at the Bnai Israel Beth David Synagogue. Rabbi Albert Pappenheim officiated, assisted by Cantor David Greengarten. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a white peau de faille long gown, with a scooped neckline, fitted bodice, and long sleeves. A beaded and appliqued motif accented the neckline; and the bouffant skirt, which extended to a chapel train. A pearl crown held a tulle illusion veil; and she carried white orchids. The maid of honour was Miss Sharon Dancyger, sister of the bride. She wore a peacock-blue cocktail gown; with a beaded bodice; and peau de soie bell-shaped skirt; and had a matching headdress. The bridesmaids were: Misses Ann Carol Rudin, of Rochester, N. Y., cousin of the bride; Gloria Back, sister of the groom; Louise Spiegel, cousin of the groom; Dorian Angel, Marsha Weinman; and Mrs. Barry Forhan, of Hamilton, Ont., cousin of the bride. They wore white satin brocaded gowns; with short sleeves; and bell-shaped skirts; and had white veil headdresses. The junior bridesmaid was Cheryl Forhan, cousin of the bride. She wore a white and pink organza dress; with a matching headpiece. They all carried bouquets of red roses. The best man was Arthur Back, cousin of the groom. The ushers were: Lloyd Pollock, cousin of the groom; Barry Forhan and Alfred Dancyger, cousins of the bride; Bernard Leibgott, Harold Mandelbaum, and Howard Weinroth. Mark Spiegel, cousin of the groom, was the junior usher. A dinner and reception followed at the Synagogue. Mrs. Dancyger, the bride's mother, wore a gown of ice blue satin brocade; with a fitted bodice; and a full-length sheath skirt; and had a matching hat. Mrs. Back, the groom's mother, chose a full-length gown of pink satin brocade; with a scooped neckline; and had a matching hat. White orchids were pinned to their evening bags. Also participating in the wedding ceremony were: Mrs. Eva Dancyger, 16 Rosseau Road, grandmother of the bride; Mrs. Mamie Spiegel, 74A Kendal Avenue; grandmother of the groom; Samuel Back, 341 Ossington Avenue, grandfather of the groom; and Miss Sophie Rubenstein, 341 Ossington Avenue, great-aunt of the groom, Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Back spent their honeymoon at the Diplomat Hotel, in Miami Beach, Florida, and on a cruise to Nassau, The Bahamas. Mrs. Back departed in a champagne-beige; silk shantung ensemble; with a sheath dress and loose coat; and had brown accessories; and a corsage of American Beauty roses. They are residing at 16 Rosseau Road. Here for the marriage were: Mr. and Mrs. Barry Forhan, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Caplan, and Marshall; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Caplan, and Max; Mr. and Mrs. A. American Jewish Life Requires Radical Changes

Excerpts from the address at the annual dinner of the Zionist Organization of America, in New York

BY DR. NAHUM GOLDMANN, PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD ZIONIST ORGANIZATION

Louis Lipsky has been one of the most impressive representatives of Zionism at its best within the American Jewish community. His greatness as a Zionist was that he always understood the basic character of Zionism as a fighting movement which was permanently challenging the status quo in Jewish life and tried to change the structure of the Jewish communities so as to enable them to become the instrument for creating a Jewish home land. By his leadership in the fight on the side of Chaim Weizmann against the Brandeis group he secured the character of American Zionism as a democratic and revolutionary movement, and as long as American Zionism was imbued by this spirit it had a great impact on American Jewish life despite the smallness of its numbers.

Today American Zionism has to learn to return to these classic principles of Lipsky's Zionism. It is in danger of losing its fighting character and becoming one of many other organizations in American Jewish life concentrating on small projects and special activities. This can never constitute the raison d'être for a Zionist Movement. American Jewish life requires radical changes.

It is in great danger of becoming dominated by the process of collecting money on the one hand, and the lust for publicity on the other. It has become so specialized that it is being dominated more and more by the far-flung bureaucracy of American Jewish life. It is very hard for intellectual leaders to find their place in the American Jewish community. The rivalry and competition between the too many organizations centers less around issues and ideologies but more around organizational prestige and fund-raising competition.

The result is a harmful decentralization with every community, every welfare fund, and every organization insisting on its complete autonomy; the absence of any central body or platform in which the great problems of American Jewish life are being discussed and clarified; a lack of understanding for the great historical dangers facing Jewish survival in the twentieth century; and the reduction of the central problem of Jewish life concerning the relations between the Diaspora (dispersion) and Israel to the lowest common denominator of financial help in various forms.

In such a situation the Zionist Movement in America has a tremendous task. It has to try to lead in the fight for a representative central organization of American Jewry which is today the most disorganized Jewish community in the world. It has to fight for a change of priorities in American Jewish life which must give the top priority to education and cultural activities instead of philanthropy and social work.

It must make American Jewry aware of its tremendous responsibilities for the future of the Jewish people as the strongest and most powerful Jewish community in the world, and be ready to take leadership in world Jewish affairs. It must forge new forms of relations between the American Jewish community and Israel much deeper and far-reaching than the generous willingness to help financially. Relations which must be based on the recognition of the central position of Israel in the Jewish life everywhere.

To think that the Zionist Movement has outlived its usefulness in the light of this situation is nonsensical. Never has the Zionist Movement in America faced greater challenges and more difficult tasks than today. The only problem is whether it will be strong enough to live up to these tasks. The first condition for this is to be united and Dr. Goldmann paid a compliment to the ZOA for its real Zionist patriotism in being ready to make great sacrifices for the sake of real Zionist unity in action.

The difficult external position of Israel and grave dangers are a result of continued Arab hostility and far-reaching Arab re-armament. The Middle East is entering a new period of instability for which the events in Yemen are the first symptom. In the coming years Israel will face serious potential dangers and the Zionist Movement which was responsible for the emergence of Israel will have more than ever to be watchful and to mobilize Jewish and non-Jewish public opinion to secure the future and the integrity of Israel.

"We Believe In Co-Existence"

From the address to the General Assembly of the United Nations

BY GOLDA MEIR, FOREIGN MINISTER OF ISRAEL

I now turn to the region of which Israel is a part. There are many that are misled by two fallacies regarding the Middle East. The first is that it is an Arab region. In fact, there are in it more non-Arabs than Arabs — Moslems, Christians and Jews. This composite pattern of peoples of various faiths and cultures has always been the pattern of the Middle East — each people with its historic continuity, past, present, and future.

The second fallacy is that all would be well in that region if it were not for the tension between the Arab States and Israel. I would be the last to underrate the difficulties and dangers which arise from that conflict. But this is only one source of tension in a part of the world which is unhappily the scene of much political instability, economic, and social backwardness, rivalry and friction between different countries and regimes, and the pressures of the cold war.

Anyone who follows the affairs of the Middle East knows that during this last year the focus of trouble in the area has been the bitter struggle within the Arab world, which has made of the Arab League no longer even a façade of unity.

Israel longs for the day when the political independence and territorial integrity of every single state in the area — Arab or non-Arab — will be assured; and when we can all concentrate on the welfare of our peoples. When I refer to the turmoil in the Arab world, it is because we are a Middle Eastern country, and therefore affected by all that affects the peace of our area, and retards its peaceful progress.

As far as the Israel-Arab dispute itself is concerned, it is as well to see clearly what is the basic problem. It is the denial by the Arab States of Israel's right to exist. If this attitude were to change, and if the Arab States and Israel were to discuss their differences at the conference table in a frank and open manner, I am positive that solutions could be found on all the specific issues. Year after year, Israel has come to this rostrum with one demand — peace between it and its Arab neighbors.

May I say here that we were grateful to the distinguished Deputy Foreign Minister of Ghana when he drew our attention again to the important statement of President Nkrumah during the 15th General Assembly, in which he called for recognition of the political realities in the Middle East and for assurance against non-aggression. We are entirely in agreement with that view.

The Arab denial of Israel's right of existence has a direct bearing on the distressing refugee problem. We are willing, and always have been willing, to discuss with the Arab Governments what can best be done to secure the future of the refugees in the light of the political and economic realities in the region.

But a natural solution to the problem is frustrated by the Arab dream of destroying Israel and the openly proclaimed Arab intention of using the refugees for this purpose. The design has been openly propagated even from the rostrum of this Assembly.

Our neighbors have tried to achieve this by various means — open or guerilla warfare, economic boycott, propaganda and threats. Negotiation and conciliation are proclaimed from this rostrum as the road to solve all other problems in the world except this one, which must, according to these spokesmen, be resolved by force. For every nation, they claim co-existence practiced in peace; for Israel, non-existence to be achieved by war.

This doctrine not only runs counter to the basic principles of the United Nations Charter. Its acceptance strikes at the very roots of our Organization. The world of today is overwhelmed by ideological disputes, international conflicts and economic controversies.

In face of this situation the basic concepts of the charter on the eschewing of force, on the unremitting search for peace, on international co-operation, on negotiation as the means to solve problems, have gained a new depth and significance. As long as negotiation is sought, there is hope. Those who rule out negotiation in the Middle East, those who year after year engage in sterile and stereotyped speeches of hostility should know that their attitude is irrelevant to the basic theme of the international community and can have no echo in an organization which has proclaimed peace to be synonymous with human survival, that they are assaulting the foundations of human progress.

The policy of the Israel Government has been and continues to be peace. It is peace not only for the world, but also between us and our neighbors. We believe in co-existence and co-operation everywhere, and we shall do everything in our power to achieve that end.

However, as long as Arab belligerency continues, Israel will take all necessary measures to be capable of protecting itself. Thus it is ironical that, when Egypt amasses a fleet of heavy bombers, and when President Nasser proclaims that his rockets will be able "to hit any place south of Beirut" (that is, Israel), an Egyptian spokesman should complain loudly from this rostrum when Israel is acquiring missiles which can be used solely for protection against attack from the air.

I do not wish to create the impression that Israel, subjected as it is to hostility, is pre-occupied only with this somber aspect of its existence. Some of you have been to Israel, and I venture that you have found a people who are developing with enthusiasm the long-neglected deserts and the rocky hills. There is a steady progress in all phases of our economy, in the development of our educational and scientific institutions.

Those who come to us from scores of countries, speaking many tongues, share the great revival of our Biblical language and our ancient culture. We have received these newcomers with love and devotion, and they have ceased to be destitute refugees and become a constructive, vital element in life. Had the Arab nations put their minds and energies into developing their lands, the refugees who dwell in their midst could have been drawn into productive life and become a real asset for the development of their countries. This is what happened in Israel with the more than a million refugees, of whom over 600,000 came from Arab lands.

We are happy to note that, despite frustrations and set-backs, there is a growing consciousness in some of the Arab countries that the direction of their energies and talents towards constructive endeavor is more vital to the welfare of their peoples than to perpetuate sterile rancor. These tendencies should be encouraged by the international community.

Despite all the speeches which we have heard from Arab representatives, we are convinced that for us and for our neighbors the day must come when we shall live in amity and co-operation. Then will the entire Middle East become a region where its tens of millions of people will dwell in peace, and only then will its economic potentialities and rich cultural heritage achieve fulfillment. This Israel believes, and towards this end we will devote all our efforts.
